MealLISTER. CAMPBELL.

Three young men of Paterson, N. J., who are on trial for murdering Jennie Bosschieter by giving her "knockout drops" and assaulting her.

After the presentation of the prosecution's evidence—complete, careful and thorough, within the remarkably brief period of two days—the defense began and closed its case within the limits of to-day's two sessions. For to-morrow nothing remains but the summing up by counsel, the charge by the court to the jury, and then Paterson hopes Each of the defendants to-day took the stand, and in a clear, straightforward manner, told his story of the midnight ride and its fateful cading. Whether or not their version has the merit of plausibility, it cer-upon all listeners by the splendid nerve which he displayed in the witness chair. When pressed first by the prosecution, and finally by the Court himself, to betray the names of certain young women whom Mc-Allister and Kerr had made an appointment to meet after nightfall, the witness peremptorily refused to mention the names on the ground that to do so might compromise the reputation of the girls.

This course probably won him more favor throughout the city at large than he has enjoyed since the days when he was halo-fellow well-met about town.

Story of Assault Denied.

Death, another of the accused, followed McAllister on the witness stand. His testimony did not differ materially from Mc-Allister's.

Death said he met Jennie and he took her to Saal's saloon. There she drank a cocktuil, an absinthe frappe and several glasses of wine. McAllister poured out the wine. Jennie acted in a drunken way when McAllister came into the room, and Jennie put her arms around McAllister's neck. The champsagne made her worse.

In the hack, Jennie became sleepy and Campbell put his finger into her mouth in order to make her vomit. She vomited on Campbell's and McAllister's handkerchiefs. She seemed to be in pain while she was vomiting.

cuting Attorney's success in adroitly injecting into the evidence the record of Campbell's alleged confersion to the police. It must now stand beside the alleged confersion made by Death a few hours before under similar conditions.

There was a feeling to-night among local lawyers that the defense had made a valiant effort at least to raise the reasonable doubts in the minds of the jury. Were it not for the disastrous confessions said to have been made by two of the defendants it is thought they would have a reasonable chance for either acquittal or a disagreement.

McAllister Won Popular Favor.

As the case stands, the feeling is general that unless the verdict of the jury shall treat all three alike, McAllister is likely to feel the hand of the law laid upon him least heavily.

Campbell's and McAllisters in manager near the was you theard to be in pain while she was she and you heard him say that you spoke of Jennie and dope. You said that by dope you meant knockout drops."

If said not assault Jennie on the night of her death, nor did McAllister, nor Campbell.

Did you know of any one else doing so?

No, sir."

On cross-examination, Death said that he did not tell the officers when arrested of the effect of the drink upon Jennie or the whole story as related in court. In reply to a question by his counsel, as to the drinking in the saloon, Campbell said: "I saw nothing put into any of the glasses other than the drinks." On cross-examination, Campbell devied telling the detectives that the contents of a bottle he saw McA'llister have would make the girl lively. The only bottle he saw in McAllister's hands that night was the champagne bottle.

Did Not Take Underclothing. Campbell denied he ever said McAllister was the first to assault the girl. No one asked the driver to participate in the as-sault. He did not see either Death or Mc-Allister take any portion of her undercloth-Allister take any portion of her underciothing.

Doctor Charles J. Loffer of New York City testified that he had seen persons "knocked out" by absinthe. Much would depend upon whether a person was accustomed to take it, and upon an almost empty stomach the drink would cause excitation, and this would be followed by total collapse.

Prosecutor Emley then asked:
"If a person had died after having taken absinthe, and chloral was found in the stomach, what would you say she died of?"
"From chloral poison," repiled the witness. Professor R. C. Vanderberg, a chemist, told how, by mixing whisky cocktalls absinthe and champagne, obtained at Saal's saloon, with embalming fluid, he had procured a crystalline reaction.

In reply to a question, he said:
"It cannot be told with accuracy by the finding of ten grains of chloral in the stomach how much had been taken to produce them there."

The case for the defense was then closed. Prosecutor Emley got Campbell to deny specifically each item in the alleged confession, said to have been made by him on the night of his arrest. This alleged confession was ruled out yesterday.

Detectives Titus, Lord and Taylor were recalled, and each went over the same ground. Where Campbell had denied, they affirmed, and where he affirmed, they denied. The testimony of the detectives closed the rebuttal and the taking of testimony.
